Mr. Charles T Robinson Explains His Discharge and His Conversation

with Thomas. "Mr. Robinson, referred to in the testimony of William Thomas, in the Reynaud embezslement suit, a report of which was published in the Appract yesterday morning, was a man named Robinson who was employed for a few days by the Howards and discharged. We make this correction in order to prevent the impression that it was Mr. J. P. Robertson, the very efficient secretary of the Howard association."—Appract, January 28th.

The above personni of the Appract of this morning demands attention, because of the The above personal of the APPEAL of this morning demands attention, because of the source which inspired it, Mr. A. D. Lang-taff, president of the Howard association. It is president of the Howard hy the Howard aspresident of the Howard association. It is true that I was employed by the Howard as-sociation and discharged by Mr. Laugstaff, and for the following reasons: An order was-sent to the office on Court street, and I direct-ed Wm. Thomas, the negro porter to fill the order, which he refused in a very impodent manner to do, and I threatened to have him discharged. To avenge himself, this negro-went to Mr. Jobe with a lie in his month, to which that gentleman refused to liston. He discharged. To avenge himself, this negro went to Mr. Jobe with a lie in his month, to which that gentleman refused to listen. He then approached Mr. Langstaff, and in him found a ready and withing listener; and it was discharged from the Howard association by Mr. Langstaff, and without a hearing. The manner of my discharge bears a striking similarity to the outrageous proceedings instituted by Mr. Langstaff against Mr. Reynand, and with as little proof. As to the infinidation on Saturiay at the examination of Mr. Reynand, William Thomas called me out of the court room and asked me if he could be sent to the penitentiary for testifying in that case. I told him no, provided he testified to the trath. When I asked him in regard to what he had said to Messrs. Jobe, Mansford and Langstaff, he denied if most peniterly. At the time I gave Thomas the order to fill the bill in the office on Court street, Mr. Johnson, of the Appeal was present, and will indorse my statement. The negro is simply a falsifier, and being willing to play the tondy to Mr. Langstaff—who it seems, aspires to be the dictator of the Howard association—he is used as the dirty tool to disseminate slander. I have always desired to avoid problicity, but in this instance "forbearance has ceused to be a virtue," and my friends of the press insist that I make this vindication.

CHARLES T. ROBINSON,

MEMPHIS, Jannary 28, 1874.

Mr. Robinson is wrong in so far as he attributes the Appeal's paragraph to the inspiration of Mr. Langstaff. That gentleman knew pothing of it. We also think him wrong when he attributes to Mr. Langstaff any desire to dictate. He is characterized by too much modesty on that,—EDS, APPEAL.]

Not this season has been and on the manary at the beauty of our sity within the walk of the one place above all others best adeated to dramatic or musical deplay. Upstairs and down, every seat was filled, and the attention mathiested abowed how closely those present had followed all the prelimmary announcements, and how eager they were to hear the Mendelssonia after n arily a year's sleence. It is fair is say they were somewhat disappointed. They looked for the May Queen to be given with orchestral accompanisment. Inasmuch as it was not, and the planto sounded—shall we say thin?—It was almost tedious and thresome, wanting, as it did, those orchestral reliefs which, under the composer's conduct of it, secured its propurarity and a high place among musical compositions of its class. This is the particular fault we have to find. But the choruses, delivered with so much precision, and almost nicety of light and shade, atoned, in part, for it. Would we could say as much for the trios, duete and solos. The first of these were well enough interpreted; but as time passed, the dullness which supervened upon the monotony and sameness of the canataia was feit with reflex effect and force by the singers, and they came almost indolently to their work, but once affect of these were well enough interpreted; but as time passed, the dullness which supervened upon the monotony and sameness of the canataia was feit with reflex effect and force by the singers, and they came almost indolently to their work, but once affect and force by the singers, and they came almost indolently to their work, but once affect which inspires performers and heips them beyond the limit of dilemma. While making the streetures upon the performance of last night we have felt it due to singers and andlence to make, we are not unmindful that the Mendelssohn is an amateur club, but we also remember it is a club of more than four years standing, and having had the advantage of excellen lendership, and coming before the public challenging critical attention, it is but just we should say what we have. To say otherwise, would be to say in our opinion, untruth, and to encourage that indisposition to study which is so generally fatal to amateur organizations.
The Mendelssohns now embrace all of our best musical talent, and, from the very first, have been patronized most liberally by the public. We think them worthy that patronage, and regard them, notwithstanding all we have said, as eminently entitled to continued support and countenance. They are the nucleus of the future, and, if encouraged at they have said, as eminently entitled to continued support and countenance. They are the nucleus of the future, and, if excouraged as they were last night, must eventually succeed in reaching a very high pitch of excellence. Of the arrangement of the stage, it is proper we should speak in terms of highest praise, also of the artistic grouping of the voices. And the programmes, ushers and general arrangements were such as called forth very general and favorable comment. We shall look for another concert in a few weeks, and meanwhite hope an appeal will be made by the clob for associate members, so that it may be placed upon the high and independent footing it stood upon
